SUSTAIN GOV. FOSS ON ENPOLMENT AND FOXBORO BILL VETOES

Governor Foss was sustained by the House today in his vetoes of the bill providing that the present party enrolment in Massachusetts should be retained under the new direct nominations law and the resolve appropriating $114,-000 for a new building at the Foxboro state hospital.

On the enrolment bill Representative Cushing of Boston pointed out that the bill was drawn simply to obviate any possibility of misinterpretation of the provisions of the new law relative to enrolments, lawyers having differed as to whether the old party enrolments stood under the new law

Representatives Lomasney and Meaney spoke for the Governor, saying that an opportunity should be given the voters of the state to enroll anew now that a new system of nominations had gone into

The vote on the enrolment bill was 105 favoring its passage to 99 opposed, or considerably less than the necessary two thirds.

Probably the matter of chief interest at the State House today will be the reading of the opinion of the supreme court on the constitutionality of the workmen's compensation bill in the Senate. If the measure proves to be constitutional its friends will seek to have it passed immediately and sent to the Governor. It has already passed the

The consumers, on the other hand, have as a whole manifested little interest in the measure and very few of their representatives have re-ceived instructions as to which way they should vote.

The Senate probably will enact the Brown $9,000,000 harbor bill today. This, too, has passed the lower branch. Governor Foss is known to be favorable to the measure and his signature is expected as a matter of course.

Some opposition is expected by many of the members to the bill providing for a state finance commission. The opposi-tion is said not to be so much to the proposition itself as to the bill as drawn. is claimed that to place the auditing of the accounts and supervising the expenditures of the state, counties, cities and towns, as provided by the bill, is a task that cannot be effectively performed by a single commission of three men. Objection is also raised to the provision abolishing the Boston finance Conference committees representing both branches are still trying to arrive at a solution of the income tax problem that will be satisfactory. At present a deadlock exists, the Senate favoring Governor Foss' resolve for a state income tax without double taxation, the House fav-oring Representative Dean's bill providing for a tax on incomes of $2000 and over, from whatever source derived.

HOW SARDOU WROTE

The moment an idea occurred to Sardou he put it down, and all the various notes, documents, particulars which have to do with this idea were joined together, forming a sort of dossier. When the idea crystallized into dramatic shape he wrote a scenario of a few pages, giving the skeleton, as it were, of the whole play. Then he put the work aside. All his various schemes were treated in the 14 bills Wednesday. Among them was same way. He had at one time from 70 Assemblyman C. W. Phillips' bill amend- to 80 dossiers in his drawers, out of which eight or ten plays came. So, when he wished to write a drama or comedy, he only had to choose. FASHIONS AND THE HOUSEHOLD

Pretty and serviceable dress for girls

FOR replenishing the summer wardrobe of the young miss, frocks of linen, poplin and cotton repp are always prac-tical and make serviceable afternoon dresses for the girl who stays in the city as well as the girl who goes away. This season there is a variety of attractive designs on the semi-tailored order that make up well in these materials and for dressy wear in actin, foulard or a French serge.

The illustration, Ladies Home Journal pattern No. 5509, could be made up effectively in a rose or navy blue linen, with collar and cuffs of white embroidered batiste or a frilling of fine net. Developed in a natural color pongee, it would be practical for general wear brightened with pipings and Helen pink or Empire green. The closing line, at the side-front of the dress, may be straight or as illustrated in shaped outline and the sleeves made full-length if desired. The skirt is in nine gores with a plait at each seam and one be tween seams and an inverted box-plait at the center-back. The pattern may be had in four sizes, 16, 17, 18 and 20 years, and for making size 18 years requires 71/2 yards 36-inch material without up and down.

ON TO STAY

To sew buttons on to garments so that they will last a long time thread the needle with strong linen thread, double it and twist it by keeping the knot between the teeth and turning the needle round between your finger, then draw the thread through a piece of beeswax or a candle. This is the tailor's method; the button will hold on as long as the fabric holds together. New York Press.

Monitor Advertising Effective

Business economies compel the manufacturer and distributor of merchandise to seek the most effective methods of advertising.

Waste is intolerable.

Scientific methods of management applied to manufacturing processes eliminate unnecessary bodily movements

Scientific methods in advertising will eliminate all wasteful mediums and deliver merchandising news as nearly as possible only to those who buy that particular kind of merchandise

An iron factor does not advertise in a shoe paper.

Nor should a merchant advertise to non-buyers.

The Christian Science Monitor is an effective advertising medium because it is read in the homes of people who are good buyers. They are influenced by the knowledge that only legitimate advertising is admitted to the Monitor's columns.

The buyer's need is wedded to confidence in the seller's statements.

WASHINGTON—The U. S. weather bureau predicts weather today as follows for New England: Fair tonight and Friday.

An area of high pressure central this morning over the lake region is producing cool, pleasant weather in all sections east of the Mississippi river. A well defined disturbance central over North Dakota is causing cloudy and unsettled weather, with local showers, between the Rocky mountains and the Mississippi river. This disturbance will probably move eastward and trubance will probably move eastward and traday.

Conditions favor for this vicinity fair weather, followed by increasing cloudiness on Friday and probably showers by Friday night or Saturday.

A BANNER PERIOD

Of late, Wall street has been giving unusual attention to the gas companies operating in the two great municipaliies of the middle West, the Laclede Gas Company of St. Louis and the Peoples Gas Company of Chicago. In a recent fortnight transactions in Laclede common aggregated $5,700,000. The com non stock outstanding is only $8,500,000. Both companies are capitalized very onservatively and each, paying 7 per ent dividends, has the credit of a remarkable development in earning power. How both have grown during the past our years is seen below:

FINANCES SHOW MUCH STRENGTH

NEW YORK-Ratio of national bank egal reserves to individual deposits was 17.27 on June 7, compared with 15.39 on Nov. 10, when the low record of last year was made. This is the third call since November and the fifth since end of the bear market of 1910, yet the gain in reserve is only 1.88 points, establishing a new low record for gains in bank reserves during a year subsequent to the end of a bear movement in stocks. Usually while such a movement is going on, liquidation of both merchandise and obligations becomes general; and the wide-spread debt-paying which follows so reduces demand for bank loans that cash reserves accumulate, until ratio of reserves to deposits rises three to

That the bear movement of last year was accompanied by an exceptionally small general liquidation is shown by the small commercial failures, defaulted liabilities being only $1.63 per $1000 of bank exchanges in the first quarter of the year, when the heaviest failures occurred, compared with an average of $2.15 for three previous bear markets and of $4.58 for eight previous bear markets. Absence of heavy liquidation also That the bear movement of last year kets. Absence of heavy liquidation also explains the smallness of gain since last summer in bank reserves; for while flow of cash into banks has been large, loans have increased fast enough to absorb this cash and prevent any greater rise in reserve.

Our increased financial strength is displayed not only by ability last year to endure declines in both stock and commodity prices without general and heavy liquidations, but also by willingness of banks now to loan large amounts at such low rates and with so small a profit as Last low rates and with so small a profit not to compensate for risk assumed.

WESTINGHOUSE MOTIONS LOST

PITTSBURG-The Westinghor ng was enlivened by attempts of George Westinghouse, to find a way whereby cumulative voting, in which lay his only hope of success, could be accomplished. All his motions were countered by Mather interests. Proposals to table the Westinghouse motions had to go over until adjourned session so that the votes could be counted. Chairman Mather and Westinghouse each personally nominated his own ticket for directors. Formal acceptance of Richard Delafield's resignation was not necessary and Harrison Nesbit, former bank examiner, but now vice-president of the Bank of Pittsburg, N. B. A., was named by management. Opposit nominee for vacancy was A. C. Humphreys, president of Stevens Institute. Charles J. Canda introd tion providing for resumption of com-

Whose Are Urban Land Values? WHATEVER may be the explanation, the fact is that such striking gains as now may be observed in urban land values are deemed "news" items to a greater degree than formerly was the case. Consequently a much wider constituency than used to be reached now ponders over the ethical as well as the pecuniary aspects of an item indicating the fabulous profits that have been made in New York city lately by owners or speculators who have taken advantage of altered methods of/bringing commuters from New Jersey and Long Island into the heart of the city. A profit of over 100 per cent in less than ten years' title to an upper Broadway corner "looks good" even to the most speculative plunger on Wall street; and it is so lurid in its concreteness, illustrating how community growth may be made to enrich individual land-owners, that it forces the most dense and obdurate defender of things as they are to wonder how long they will escape investigation.

Advocates of reformation in taxation of land values in the United States have been wont to urge persons seeking light to turn their eyes to Australia or New Zealand or to Germany with its frank insistence that increased urban land values must become increasingly subject to social control and to appropriation of increment by the municipality or the state. Much is to be gained by such research, for both the older European and the younger Australasian states have gone far in attacking a form of monopoly and injustice that accounts for much of the untoward condition of congested urban communities. But there is a land somewhat nearer home that is attracting many emigrants from this country, which also is dealing with taxation of land values in a way to minimize the inequities of the conventional and historic Anglo-American system. Indeed, it is claimed by a writer in the American Magazine that one reason for the American invasion of Canada, and the utter absence of any longing on the part of emigrants to return to the United States, is the fairer system of taxation that they find in British Columbia, Alberta and the northwest generally.

Current literature dealing with the ethics of contemporary life finds it difficult to keep away from the problem of taxation reform. Sentiment favorable to such a system as will make continued private ownership of undeveloped urban land unattractive to speculators is rapidly gaining. People who create values by their proximity one to the other are bound to insist on a larger share of the pecuniary profit therefrom. Communities, as such, may ere long purchase cutlying districts, order their planning and development and turn the profit from sales into the community treasury.

See Your Own City First THE Chicago Association of Commerce has arranged trips of inspection for aldermen and citizens which extend to all points within that city's zone of activity. The purpose is to acquaint the participants with the scope and character of the industries that contribute to the commercial greatness of the community. These include passenger and freight terminals, railroad yards, junctions, belt lines, factories, grain warehouses, storage warehouses, lumber, tannery and packing districts. The idea might be easily elaborated, as it probably will be, so that the inspection can be extended into parts of the city that are neither industrial nor commercial but yet of prime importance. The ordinary city resident anywhere does not know his own city. There are people in Chicago as elsewhere who are ignorant of all sides of their city, save the sides in which they do business and reside. They are thus deprived of knowledge they should possess before they venture to visit other cities. Those who see only one side of a city do not know it as a whole. They may be the best of citizens in some respects, but their lack of understanding is, nevertheless, a handicap to their usefulness.

If voters knew their cities better, knew all their ins and outs, grasped the conditions under which the masses of their people live, were able to appreciate the wants and needs of the populace, they could serve their communities far better than they do at the polls. One advantage of the practical politician is that he does understand his city and the people of his city. As a rule, he can talk intelligently about all parts of it to people from all parts of it. When he appears among the masses they understand him, and they know that he understands them.

Really, the duty of the good citizen begins in the community in which he lives. If he perform it there, he will not be far from its performance toward his state and his country. If he know his city well, he will not be far from knowledge of his state and

Drama in Latin America

TRAVELERS in South and Central America usually find the national theater in the one or other municipality the most conspicuous structure. This is easily accounted for. The Spanish language from time immemorial has lent itself to dramatic construction. Whether in Spain itself or in Spanish America, the theater has centered the affection of the people. With the arrival of the colonial regime in the new world, the play continued as a national institution, and when the republics were established one by one patriotism frequently found expression through stage representation. At the present time the Castilian tongue is more ardent than ever in the service of the theater, and many Latin-American dramatists see their works performed not only in the western world but in Madrid.

The fine playhouses of Central and South America serve the double purpose of affording presentation to native plays and inducing foreign artists to visit them at salaries frequently extraordinarily high. Many of the leading French, Italian and Spanish actors and actresses, at the one or other time in their careers, have appeared in cities like Rio de Janeiro, Santiago or Buenos Aires. But the tendency of late has been to encourage home talent. Chile is taking the lead in this respect. It points with pride to the achievements of Manuel Concha, Guillermo Gana and Carlos Walker Martinez. Here are dramatists, the Chileans aver, who should have their plays interpreted by those who feel as their inspired writers must have felt. There is hardly a doubt that the popularity of Martinez's "Manuel Rodrigues" is as great today as when this drama some years ago touched a patriotic chord in the hearts of all Chileans.

What Martinez is to Chile, Manuel Segura means to Peru. Styled the genius of the Peruvian stage, he has struck a new note in the dramatic history of his country. A fellow dramatist of Segura, Nicolas Carpancho, also wrote with considerable success. In Venezuela the people consider Heriberto Garcia de Quevedo a dramatist of the first rank, and find great satisfaction in the fact that his plays are performed in the Madrid theaters,

The history of Mexico includes an interesting chapter devoted to the history of its drama. It is believed that with the entrance of greater political liberty fresh incentive will be found for dramatic effort. The nation has not forgotten that Fernando Calderon, while only a namesake of the great Calderon of the old world, early in the nineteenth century brought on the Mexican dramatic renaissance when his first play was presented at Guadalajara. The great national theater now under construction in Mexico City is an evidence of the Latin-American attachment for the playhouse.

ADMIRAL Togo, who is now on his way to the United States, is said to be a very reticent man, so that a newspaper expression from him as to what he thinks of the country before he sees it cannot be confidently anticipated.

Lincoln Memorial Site SINCE the formation of the government more than $500,000,000 has been expended for public buildings, monuments and works of art, a major part of this sum being appropriated during the past quarter of a century. No candid American, with any standard of taste, can declare that the results of this expenditure "adequately and properly represent or express the state of enlightenment and cultivation which our people have attained." Why the discrepancy, then, between the "lasting monuments to our civilization" and the popular standards? Because, until comparatively recently, the nation, the states and the municipalities have failed to enlist as expert advisers men competent to assist in solving problems of architecture, selection of statues, planning of sites and coordination of buildings.

Happily the predestined popular demand that Washington should be the site of a monument worthy of Abraham Lincoln did not come to a head until a new era of governmental attitude toward art had dawned. A generation ago, if carried through Congress and projected by forces then dominant, the scheme probably would have given the nation a monstrosity in marble, badly placed and forever to be deplored. As it is now, the fitness of the site to be utilized is at last made certain by the report just rendered by the commission on fine arts, in response to a formal demand for its expert opinion. With Mr. Cannon no longer where he can use official influence, it would seem as if the plan to place the monument near the Union station need never be heard of again; and Congress can at once proceed to prepare the park on the Potomac, on the same axis as the Capitol and the Washington monument, as the site for a memorial nobler and finer than any that the country has ever seen.

The creation of the commission of fine arts, to which such important details can be referred for expert advice, was a commendable act of the administration of President Roosevelt. That it should have indorsed the report of the 1901 Burnham commission, in this matter of site for the Lincoln memorial, is not surprising. That body was superlative in its personnel, broad and far sighted in its views and outlined a scheme of capital planning full of elements of beauty and grandeur. The duty of the near future, now that the right site for the Lincoln memorial has been named, is to proceed with selection of a design after hints also given by the Burnham commission. "It should possess the quality of universality, and also should have a character essentially distinct from that of any monument either now existing in the district or hereafter to be erected." Of the people's willingness to pay the cost there is no question. They, as well as the artists, want the splendid thing done in a splendid way. They love Lincoln. They want art to deepen their affection and immortalize his greatness in its

So FAR as the filling of any of the higher posts in the American diplomatic service is concerned, it is the popular belief that an appointment is simply an episode in the career of the person chosen. There was formerly a great deal more foundation for this belief than there is now. It is true that ministers and ambassadors are still appointed outright from the ranks of private life, in recognition of achievements in the professions or in literature or in commerce; but Frederick Van Dyne, who treats the matter in Case and Comment, shows that the foreign service of the country is rapidly becoming one in which careers are begun, distinguished and rounded out. Mr. Van Dyne is assistant solicitor of the department of state, and he writes, therefore, as one possessing intimate knowledge of his subject.

The United States has forty-four principal diplomatic representatives in foreign countries—ten ambassadors, thirty-one envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary, two ministers resident and consuls general and one agent and consul general. Of the ten ambassadors, eight have actually had previous diplomatic experience, one of them as secretary of state and seven as ministers. Prior to their appointment three of them served as assistant secretaries of state, and one of the three had also served as secretary of legation and as chief clerk in the department of state. Of the thirty-one envoys, one served previously as minister in four different countries, four in two; one was assistant secretary of state, nine were promoted from the position of secretary of legation or embassy, and seven served as consul. Three of the ambassadors have given fourteen years to the foreign service, another thirteen and one twenty.

All this and much more that Mr. Van Dyne has to say will come to many people who have been reading loose statements regarding the diplomatic service as an agreeable surprise. However, knowledge of the growing stability of the service and of the opportunity it opens for a career has been spreading quietly in recent years, with the result that educated and ambitious young men are finding their way in growing numbers annually into minor positions in the legations and embassies as well as into the state department, with the view of working their way up. As may be seen by the analysis given, this hope has already been frequently realized.

The foreign service of the government has many charms, social and otherwise. The attache of an embassy or a legation of the United States may well feel proud of the connection; the dignity and distinction attaching to the post of representative of so great a nation are not to be underrated. But Mr. Van Dyne strives to make clear the point that diplomatic positions are not sinecures; he asserts, on the contrary, that there are few professions which require such thorough training and such hard study. The successful diplomatist must be a person of exceptional address, educated, cultured, a linguist and a compendium of general information. He must not only know his own country but all others, and especially must he be familiar with the manners and customs and governmental methods of the country to which he is accredited. But it is all worth while, for in American diplomacy is opportunity for a career of international prominence and celebrity.

In a bulletin intended to set forth the need of greater instruction in home economics, issued by the University of Wisconsin, it is estimated that in this country annually there is an expenditure aggregating $10,000,000,000 for food, shelter, clothing, etc., and that women are charged with the disbursement of 90 per cent of this vast sum. It is pointed out that in any other phase of life the persons entrusted with so great a responsibility would be required to pass through a rigid system of training. Women, as a rule, however, are expected to become careful and shrewd purchasing agents for the family without any previous training for the task imposed upon them. Says the bulletin: "The average homemaker disposes of money as her mother did before her, or as her neighbor spends her money." To this it adds: "The state is taxed to provide instruction in the principles governing the production of raw materials and the manufacture of these raw materials into the finished product. Women should be trained to use this material so that there will be the least possible waste of time or money and the best results obtained."

Why Women Should Learn to Save

This is sound reasoning. The only question is, how would it be possible to impart such instruction to women in general? At the most, only a small percentage of women may enjoy educational advantages of any kind beyond those afforded by the grammar schools. In the very nature of the case, training in home economics for women in the mass must come to them in some other way than through ordinary school instruction. It is coming to them in this way-it is coming through the medium of neighborhood social centers, through the better class of women's clubs, through contact with women trained in domestic economy, through books, magazines and newspapers. The leaven that is operating to raise the standard of household management in the United States, however, is the knowledge of economics that in these later days the higher schools are disseminating among women students. The very bulletin quoted above carries with it proof of the growing recognition in the universities of the need of practical training in housewifery for women

However, there is a point of importance in this connection that should not be overlooked. Man, the usual breadwinner, would be in a sad plight if the disburser of his earnings-wife, sister, mother-were not, as a rule, possessed of a generous measure of native shrewdness. The most accomplished male financier would find it difficult, if not impossible, to solve the money problems that confront the average housekeeper. In all discussions of advanced home economics—and they are likely to be quite frequent in the future—recognition and credit must never be withheld from the women who on the smallest possible allowances manage to keep their families going comfortably and harmoniously. Making both ends meet on a small income is a different problem from effecting savings on large expenditures. This much said in justice to women in general, it still remains true that better training in home economics is one of the great needs of this country and one that calls for encouragement from all thinking people.

INTIMATION from a Frenchman that France would not take kindly to all the inspection practised in the United States should, at least, cause us to think about the matter, especially since we are asked to submit to more inspection still.
